Bring up a chair for me. He'd never, ever, overlooked a prop. A total of students from a stratified random sample of 49U. Among them is sixteen-year-old Ray Garraty, and he knows the rules-keep a steady walking pace of four miles per hour without stopping. But they discover more and more anomalies in the "truth", and then Laszlo begins to wonder what is REALLY going on -- but only when it may be too late for him The plot may get a bit overly complex at the very end to the point where it trips over its own toes the final twist isn't really needed but the concept and the character of Laszlo are engaging enough to make this a Thumping Good Read and for me to give it 4. In his
